LONDON, 10 February 2016 – Leading European securities brokerage iDealing has become self-clearing in the UK, paving the way for the low-cost broker to reduce UK fees even further thanks to the virtual elimination of third-party costs.

iDealing last December launched commission-free trading for Euronext-listed securities after becoming self-clearing on all its Euronext markets – France, the Netherlands and Belgium – as well as self-settling and self-custody. Eliminating third-party costs in this way allowed iDealing to offer commission-free trading of stocks, bonds, ETFs and some derivatives listed on Euronext Brussels, Amsterdam and Paris.

The new move opens the way for the UK securities trading fee structure to evolve towards that of European securities. iDealing is now self-clearing in all its markets.

iDealing was founded in the UK 16 years ago, making it one of the oldest low-cost online brokers in Europe. It expanded to France in early 2012 and to the Netherlands and Belgium in December 2015.

Ever since its launch, iDealing has been on a mission to drive down costs and disrupt the brokerage industry - saving retail and institutional investors large amounts of money. "We're able to offer low-cost trading and remain profitable because we force variable costs to a minimum. The four most expensive third-party costs are for IT, custody, settlement and clearing – and we now do all those things in-house, for all our markets" says Lee Foster Bowman, founder and CEO of iDealing.
